The Explanation of the First Part, to be thrown with Dice.

I have stated in this Book, under twelve proper Heads, such Questions as are very pleasing and agreeable to either Sex, and ought to be consulted, not only for Pleasure but Advantage; and these are governed by twelve Celestial Signs, referring you to twelve Sages, who were great Astrologers and Philosophers in their time, to Resolve what you Demand; and under each of them you will find it in plain Words, without any dark or obscure Figures, and these they are:

1. Success, or the contrary relating to Marriage. Go to Protagoras.
2. Friendship contracted, whether real or not. Go to Cornelius Agrippa.
3. Good and bad Success in Affairs and Manners of Life. Go to Socrates.
4. Whether you shall have the Party desired, and when. Go to Plato.
5. Pretence of Love, whether real or not. Go to Aristotle.
6. Whether you shall obtain your Wealth or not. Go to Parmenides.
7. How many Husbands or Wives a Party shall have. Go to Xenophon.
8. Whether you shall have Children, and whether Boys or Girls. Go to Seneca.
9. A Friend absent, if he shall return, and when. Go to Crisostomus.
10. Whether it is proper to Marry or forbear it. Go to Xenocrates.
11. Whether your Affairs shall be prosperous, and by what means you will best thrive. Go to Alcibiades Magnus.
12. The Party desired, you are to Marry. Go to Aristotle.

Now to know what Figure is cast, From what you have stated your Question, and cast your Dice, suppose you throw them thus Dice, and you desire to know your Success in Marriage, in the first Question, which directs you to Protagoras, look into his Regulator and observe for 6, and you will find it thus:

Now observe, you have thrown well in a trice,
And find the happy Favourite of the Dice;
A Married Party, and I think you soon shall find,
And of all others still your best and truest friend.

						6	8	10	11	12

And so according to any other Cast just now, of any of the Questions than your twelve Chances in one Die, to six, and from six to twelve, on two.

The High Dutch, or German Fortune-teller

Questions relating to Love and Marriage, resolved according to Pyromancy.

1. THe Party lov'd knows not you are in pain,
Or else you should not long of it complain;
Speak freely then your mind, and you will see
In a few weeks you both will well agree.
2. She is not rich, as you suppose; but yet
In her a happy Fortune you will get;
She's chaste and vertuous; and with such a Wife
The Fates decree a comfortable Life.
3. O now, or never, you will have your mind,
Here Fortune smiles, the Party will prove kind;
A while, indeed, you'll at a distance stand,
But never be upon the losing hand.
4. Come, though a slip there has been by the way,
She's n'er the worse, as when you've try'd you'll say;
Her industry amends for that will make;
Then for one failing do not her forsake.
5. Come Cupid, try thy shaft on this coy Maid,
She will comply, though now she seems afraid;
When her first blushes are by time worn out,
She'll grow familiar, and soon come about.
6. Now, Mistress, you have thrown well in a trice,
And are the happy Favourite of the dice;
A Man of Parts and Wealth you soon shall wed,
And of a Boy the first year brought to bed.

7. It matters not, although he's something old;
There is, to answer that, good store of Gold:

You shall go gay, and with what he does leave
Gain a young Husband that Love's doe will give.

8. Well, you may think of love, but 'tis not yet,
The Stars decree you prosperously should hit;

However, be'n't cast down, your lot is fair,
And you'll be marry'd before your last prayer.

9. Well done, I say, the Party that you like,
Will in a little time the bargain strike;

Some doubts and fears at present hinders it,
But those blown o'er, what you desire you'll get.

10. Come on, brisk Lover, now's your time to speed,
But little trouble in it you will need;

Venus, the Queen of Love, does seem to smile,
And she no longer will your hopes beguile.

11. There's something in it, but it will not do,
So you must stay at least a Year or two;

Yet when the circling Sun has run that course,
Then comes, I take for Better or for Worse.

12. Hold up thy head, though crosses have been many,
From this time forth you scarce will fight of any;

Riches await you in a marriage State,
And it comes happy, though it comes but late.

Questions relating to Friendship resolved, according to Cornelius Agrippa.

1. Your Friends are few, though of those few you'll find
They will to you in greatest need be kind;

Be cautious then, and keep them still in store,
For these once lost, 'twill hard be to get more.

2. O! trust not those who flatter now, for they
When a storm comes will leave you and away;

'Tis now for int'rest that they are so kind;
Reject them then, and your own business mind.

3. The Party you suspect; you need not fear,
The Stories all are false that you did hear;

You safely may repose a confidence,
And in so doing you'll find no offence.

4. You have deceived been, which makes you doubt
A true Friend you again cannot find out;

Muse not so, though many false do prove,
There's one who bears to you a cordial love.

5. Trust not too soon, before you more have try'd,
Lest when you want this Friendship you'r deny'd;

And then too late your trust in vain you'll see,
And blame your self for your credulity.

6. This offer'd kindness do not you despise,
By it you will unto Preferment rise;
With modesty receive, and never fear
What others say, there is no danger near.

7. Try once again before you trust too far,
And of what you have trusted have a care;
Recal it, if you can, until you know
Whether this Party is a Friend or Foe.

8. No doubt there you will true Friendship have,
Which nev'r will cease till parted by the grave,
Death only can undo it, that is plain;
In the mean while by it you'll reap much gain.

9. This sawning is to try you, have a care
You be not drawn by it into a share;
And when they find no more for them you'll do,
They'll leave to flatter, and then laugh at you.

10. In your distress you shall find a true Friend,
One that will stand by you unto the end;
When Kindred do forsake you, then you'll see
Your comfort soon will from a Stranger be.

11. Come once more try, though you have lost before,
There is no danger that loss to restore;
A Female shall be kinder than a Male,
By her assistance your cause shall prevail.

12. By Female fraud beware you an't undone;
Too late discover what you did too soon;
Much mischief lurks within those smiles you court,
And you unsafely with the danger sport.

Questions relating to good or bad Success in Affairs, resolved by Socrates.

UNhappy fortune in your middle days,

But yet kind Phœbus rules your birth, and says,
A little time your crooked fate shall mend,
And prosperous blessings crown you in the end.

2. Struggle no more, alas! it is in vain,
The time's not come you shall your wish obtain;
Yet such a time there is, and you shall see
A sudden change, with much prosperity.

3. Mild Jove did rule thy birth, and gives success
In all you undertake, more or less;
To riches you shall rise, by ways unthought,
And shall possess the things you never sought.

4. By marriage shall your fortune much encrease,
But in it I can't promise you much peace;
Some jars will rise, procur'd by your Relations,
Which will be multiply'd into vexations.

The High Dutch and German Juggling

5. Long life and happy, is decreed for thee,
Then what if thou shouldst not over handsome be,
Nev'r vex at it, thy Money buys thee love,
'Tis the great wheel which all the rest does move.

6. By industry you labour must to thrive,
And 'gainst the stream to gain wealth you must strive;
But being gain'd, you may sit down at ease,
Look back with joy on toils that did not please.

7. More crosses are behind, old Saturn still,
Who rul'd thy birth, makes thee persons still;
Thou do'st not heed good counsils, therefore know,
For this cause thy Affairs do backward go.

8. Something is promis'd by the watry Sign,
Pisces does likewise with Aquarius joyn;
By Sea-adventures thou art born to thrive,
Or else in vain for what you wish you strive.

9. Dying Relations shall promote thy state,
And by what they do leave thou maist grow great;
If thy own folly hinder not the chance,
That should thee in a little time advance.

10. Oh! be not hasty in pursuing wealth,
Thy Mercury says it will be lost by stealth;
But be contented with a mean estate,
Strive what thou canst thou never shalt be great.

11. So, 'tis well thrown, a portion is thy lot,
It brings thee Friends, and pleasure, and what not;
But yet be wise, that it may thee advance,
'Twas not deserved, but prov'd the hit of Chance.

12. Ill-luck betides thee, nothing yet will do;
You must new methods, and new ways pursue,
Or else before you find no prosperous gale,
Of Fortune will with full gulf spread your sail.

Whether one shall marry the Party desired, and when transfused by Pluto.

1. Not yet so fast, this Party's not your lot,
Another has a former promise got;
Your nuptial-day still at some distance stands,
'Tis with one yet unknown you must joyn hands.

2. Come, stand no longer out, lest you outstay
The time that must alor the happy day;
Within three Moons, if you would be well sped,
It is decreed you must yield to be wed.

3. Came not the Party by the other day,
With whom you willingly could sport and play;
Yes; blush not, and it shall be once your lot,
But yet a while you must not be too hot.

4. Alas!

The Pigg Duty and German Fortune-teller.

4. Alas! I grieve to think you must long stay,
And ten to one but always so you may;
However, Fate may alter this decree,
But 'twill be some years e're you marry'd be.

5. Nothing so sure as Marriage in a year,
Though none court you now, yet many will appear
Desirous of your love, and long to taste
The pleasures that are flow'd beneath your waste.

6. Kindness is not amiss, if you see right,
For now Love promises you much delight;
Your year is come, that Venus sets the Prize,
Delay no longer, marry and be wise.

7. To forty odd, I much fear, you will stay;
'Tis so much niceness made you this delay;
This is not handsome, that not rich, you cry;
But with more faults you will at last comply.

8. You long have tarried, but all not in vain,
The thirtieth year is coming on again;
In that your lot is cast, then be content,
And you will not of staying e're repent.

9. Well meant, it has been long, but now indeed,
All doubts remov'd, it will be soon agreed;
A merry Christmas you this year will keep,
And most contentedly in soft arms sleep.

10. Nothing shall hinder, when nine months are gone,
Till then contented be to lie alone;
Or if some slip you make, the knot must be
Defer'd to be fast ty'd till months thrice three.

11. A little longer you are bound to stay,
But 'tis for one will keep you fine and gay;
Let it be never said then that you grieve,
Since by delay you benefits receive.

12. E're five and twenty, though you think it long,
You shall be wed, and find you have no wrong;
Whilst many be unhappy in their choice,
Yours shall be such as will make you rejoice.

Whether Love be real or not, resolved by Antonio.

THe Party that does make this offer,

Means as he says, then take his proffer;
And you'll be happy all your Life,
If you prove a chaste loving Wife.

2. No more of this, it will not do,
'Tis all a sham, he does not woo;
That he intends at last to wed,
But 'tis to get your Maiden-head.

3. Be-

3. Believe this matter; for you truly may,
There is much truth in what your Love does say;
If little scruples can make you deny,
I cannot promise when you will comply.

4. Alas! she does but flatter, to see how
She can your mind to Love's subjection bow:
Go seek another, let her go, for she
Dissembles, and will never yield to thee.

5. Behold the eyes, and see they speak
What from the heart dare not yet break;
There's true affection lodg'd within;
And you whate'er you will may win.

6. I cannot tell now what to say,
It doubtful stands, but don't delay,
Keep up the humour, and you'll see
Whether it love or friendship be.

7. There's something breeding in the mind,
And fain a passage thence would find;
Alas! 'tis love, come never doubt,
Though now imprison'd 'twill break out.

8. There is another in the way,
Which makes this trifling and delay;
Therefore believe not what is said,
He loves and courts another Maid.

9. There is no fear, the matter now is plain,
If you can love you will be lov'd again;
A rub or two there in the way may prove,
But true kindness will it at last remove.

10. O banter not this pretty Lass, you Knave,
You of a Wife already make a Slave;
Would you a ruin pull down on her head;
She will not have thee though thy Wife were dead.

11. Enquire well here, before you go too far,
Between you and your wish there is a bar;
Another in your absence came between,
And his love to you is as it n'er had been.

12. You will make nothing on't, though you spend time,
And put off others, loytering for him;
Call in your wandering senses, and you'll see
All these pretences are but flattery.

Whether you shall obtain what you wish or desire, resolved by Parinesius.

WHat you desire, at first will be deny'd,
But no doubt granted when you thrice have try'd;
Yet wish no more of this kind, lest you fall,
Since many mis where one does e're prevail.

There is a prospect that you wish should take,
But then you must a better int'rest make;

You have false Friends to help you in your need,
And if in this they do't, they're Friends indeed.

You wish for one that is for you too high,
And wish in vain, for she will never comply;
Therefore withdraw your thoughts; then I do tell
You'll meet with one you'll live withal as well.

There's something in't, I doubt not, but 'twill do,
You wish for one that wishing is for you;
And when your minds are to each other set,
You in your wishes shall be jointly pleas'd.

Alas! No, no, why will you wish to be
What Fortune, or the Fates did ne'er decree?
Lay by such fond desires, and be more such;
You never will obtain what now you seek.

'Tis a bold thought, which if you will improve,
In time will raise you to the Lady's love;
But if your present purpose you neglect,
No more than what you now enjoy, expect.

You have but wish'd, and Fortune does consent,
You shall have what you wish to your content;
No envious star does interpose your bliss,
But a long scene you'll have of happiness.

There was a time you might have had your will,
But 'tis too late, Time's wheel, that ne'er stands still,
Has wound up all the bottom of your hope,
And to renew't there is no further scope.

O! this will do, come waver not in mind,
What you desire to have, at last you'll find;
Patience is all, till the time comes about,
Which will be quickly here, I make no doubt.

No matter what some say, do not despair,
Your cause is good, and what you wish stands fair;
'Tis true, some disappointments will be had,
But those blown over, you'll again be glad.

You wish for one who is to Heaven gone,
One whose long voyage in this World is done;
Though you knew't not, yet Fortune tells you plain,
If you wish on, your wishes are in vain.

What would you have? Wishes your wish confute,
Those you think Friends, wish to prevent your suit;
They labour hard to keep you in low state,
Lest you should get your own, when you are great.

How many Husbands or Wives a Man may be married to by Custom

THe first shall kind and very pleasing be,
But Fate forbids him long to live with thee;
Two more succeed, the first of these prove bad;
The next not like unto the first you had.
2. Thy Wife's but one; thy flow'rs but one;
Shalt linger here, and so before her go;
But she thy memory shall keep in mind;
And for thy sake no second marriage bind.
3. Oh! my young Girl; hark, I will tell you this;
Thou wilt have Husbands five unto thy life;
The last shall lay you in a handsome grave;
And spend extravagant what's yours to save.
4. Two I preface; the first shall be a maid;
And shall be lov'd by many besides thee;
But dying poor, thou marry shall for wealth;
And often Cuckold the old Man by stealth.
5. Alas! there's none that I can find for thee;
You have unconstant been, not to be true;
Which frightens others; wherefore I must bid you
You'll stay too long, and at last die a Maid.
6. How! nine, my Dear; O, my dear, that's a tale;
Venture on nine, nine Taylors make a Man;
Perhaps 'tis meant so; One so small as you;
Certainly with nine Men can never do.
7. Alack, alack, you'll an old Woman be;
And have a coughing Granney in your bed;
Till weary'd out; but in some years shall die;
And with her wealth a young One you shall buy.
8. Why, you wou'd have more than come to your share;
And yet of venturing often have a care;
For like the mouse that nibbles at the cheese,
If you beware not, you will have a share.
9. Beware a second Match, though it be sweet;
And for your former shrewdness pay you debt;
The first you do use harshly, but the last;
You'll fawn on, for all that your bones hell bite.
10. Come lift your head up, though you be grown pale;
There's one reserv'd, ne'er let your courage fail;
A Man that tosse the steel-bar's your lot;
An honest Taylor you will have, God wot.
11. Hold, hold my Friend; what is it that you do?
You aim at three, and are to have but two;
The third must in another wedlock joyn;
You'd hear your Neighbour say, He must be mine.

English and German Poems

1. Nothing so sore, as this is a good thing,
Why, Girl, thou shalt in fairs and games go,
But yet the Stars to thee may prove untrue,
You dying young, your Husband leave behind

Whether a Woman shall have Children, and how many, &c. resolved by Seneca

A Child within a twelve month you shall have,
I will be a Boy as you your self and crave;

But being grown, afterward it will prove;
Then comes a Girl that must possess your love.

2. Two Boys, and a fair Girl is all thy lot;
The latter is not by thy Husband got;
And when she's fifteen, wed her without fail,
Or else she will be playing with her tail.

3. Though long you wish for one, it will not be,
Till you have marry'd been years two times three;
And though it sickly be, it will survive,
Then getting strength it will grow up and thrive.

4. Make haste and marry, for you pregnant are,
For he that got it will not for you care;
Take the next Offer, least your credit sink,
Which can be saved now only by a Clunk.

5. Two Twins you will have at the second birth,
A Boy and Girl which shall cause you much mirth;
After the danger 'scapt, and then no more,
Falls to your lot; make much then of this store.

6. You marry'd late, and therefore you are late,
Although you try for Children, you'll have none;
However, with your fortune be content,
Your days they will with lesser care be spent.

7. Nothing but Girls, shews you cold natured are,
Then to restore it heating meats prepare;
Which in the end, as your long wish'd for Joy,
Shall make you smile upon a lusty Boy.

8. No more repine, you will not barren be,
The Father shall rejoice an Heir to see;
Though late it come, 'tis such, I dare engage,
As shall a Comfort be to your old Age.

9. Three Children and no more, as you must have;
Yet two will early drop into the Grave;
These by two Husbands you will kindly breed,
Then be contented with what is decreed.

10. As yet no hopes or sign there does appear,
Yet trust to Chance, endeavour and don't fear;
The fault is not in you, seek out for Aid,
And so a pretty Infant will be made.

11. One only 'tis shall make your heart grow glad,
You shall rejoyce again though now you're sad;
And though you now may think it strange to see,
Within nine weeks you'll find your belly swell.
12. Nothing, alas! as yet, I promise can,
Before you seek for some more able Man;
Till first you grieve, and cry, and sigh in vain,
The next you wed, shall ease you of your pain.

Whether Friends absent be in health, and if return, restored by Treachery.

1. IN health, be sure, though business does delay
The time appointed, on the parting day;
And when you least suspect it, you will see
The Party you desire from danger free.
2. Some sickness does detain whom you desire,
But yet by it the Party won't expire;
You'll have a letter speedily, and so
Whatever has befallen, you may know.
3. Alas! another Beauty he has found,
Which chains his heart, by giving it a wound;
Though but by chance he's Captive to her eyes,
He never will return to be your Prize.
4. The Winds and Seas detain your only Joy,
And Fortune threatens your hopes to destroy;
Yet hope the best, and be not in such pain,
Those stars that threaten now, long will not reign.
5. 'Tis a long journey, but at last will end,
And you again may welcome home your Friend;
When double joys shall flow for absence long,
As waves divided, joyning grow more strong.
6. Against the Party's will it is he stays,
Some trouble does occasion these delays;
His kindness is no less than 'twas before,
'Tis you, and only you he does adore.
7. Come, be not melancholy, she will come,
And what she gets abroad, she'll bring you home;
Whether it be a Child? the Father's wealth
In publick will maintain what's got by stealth.
8. I fear no more the Party will return,
Then cease your doubtful thoughts, and do but mourn;
Get you another friend, whose constancy
May let you see all will not from you fly.
9. Go search the Town, in some odd nook you'll find,
Your late stray'd Sheep, who's gone 'cause you're unkind;
Shew more respect to such desert, and then
You'll happy live, and never part again.

10. Come, break blow, and break the breaking time;
 Bring home this Wight again with profane
 His love is constant, though you parted are,
 As at his fate return he will declare.
 11. She's fled into another's arms, and you,
 By your delays have lost a Lover true;
 Your flight destroy'd the passion of her mind,
 To raise a new one for him that's more kind.
 12. As a fear'd Lark do's circling take in flight,
 And in the same place where it rode first light,
 So she is gone, but can't long absent be,
 Her loves too strong to keep her long from thee.

Whether Love be true or feign'd, gooder marry, see, resolved by Chastity.

1. This match some hindrance meets, but it will speed;
 'Twill happy prove, and a good match indeed;
 Your love's begun under a happy star,
 And Fortune to promote it took much care.
2. Fear not to marry, your's will be the gain;
 There is much pleasure for a little pain;
 A little time o'er-slept, may ever lose
 What you would alter, but you cannot choose.
3. There is no danger, though your friends deny,
 When once you marry'd they will soon comply;
 'Tis pity you have stay'd so long indeed,
 Delay no longer then, but now proceed.
4. What do you ask me?—No, it is not best,
 This match will ever rob you of your rest;
 Your time's not yet, another year is due
 To time, before Fortune can pleasure you.
5. This has a prospect of good luck I see,
 And that it may still successful be,
 Pray take advice, for the concern bears weight,
 When once your'er enter'd there is no retreat.
6. 'Tis honestly begun and so will end,
 On what is said you fully may depend;
 Then mind not worldly wealth, for 'tis in vain,
 Since virtue here will be the greatest gain.
7. Stay,—stay, be not too hasty, let time prove
 How you can like, and well each other love;
 What is't that does unhappy marriage make,
 Because they blindfold do each other take.
8. This match I disapprove, pursue no more,
 There is a better yet remains in store;
 Try once again, the stars are not unkind,
 And speedily you will a fitter find.

There's

9. There's health, and life, and love, this seems to me
 But oddly in this union, and this seems to me
 Yet, time may change, and then you'll see
 I'll not forbid that you each other see
 10. O! by all means pursue what you begin
 And leave not now your business half undone
 There's no such time as when the Queen of Love
 Ascendant is among the Stars above
 11. No more, I say, but were my love to show
 I were a Fool this offer to refuse
 Your market's made, if you this bargain take
 It is well worth whatever you have gave
 12. I can't but wonder, that you do stand out
 When all conspire to bring the thing about
 Beware that you repent it not too late
 He's a fool that says he'll never love

Whether Affairs prosper, and by what means, by the Dutch and German Postmaster.

1. Some crosses there are cast, and some are given
 Yet you a comfortable life may have
 If you contented be in your estate
 Aspiring not to be o're rich or great
 2. A middle fortune is for thee best
 And in most undertakings you'll succeed
 What most you fear shall not be done
 Then let no needless cares your peace defile
 3. By marriage you shall to perfection
 If in the management you prove true
 You'll find a friend you little did expect
 That you in this affair will well direct
 4. In plenty you a long life may obtain
 If moderate, from excess you do refrain
 Friends you'll have many, and adventures will
 Your bags and coffers with much treasure fill
 5. What has been past cannot amended be
 To what's to come you must then better see
 By trading you'll best thrive, and get again
 What has miscarried, or been spent in vain
 6. In rural matters you may prosper well
 'Tis an unlucky place in which you dwell
 Remove then, and your luck will better be
 This is a business that's not fit for thee
 7. By merchandize thou promis'd art to gain
 Physick nor law will never thee maintain
 Go and adventure, for why the Seas and Wind
 Both promise in thy fortune to be kind

8. Your Friends, though they have been false, and willing you should
 To give good breeding, by which I hope you shall not be deceived
 You shall to favour rise, and though I have said, I have said
 Out of that favour raise a good Estate
 9. The Court and City are the place, where you shall find
 Fortune aloft success unto your share
 In trading it is best; too far don't trade
 Left when all's done you do come by the trade
 10. In some fine Country-market town, where you shall find
 You may for little there live well at ease
 And by frugality your self maintain
 As well as those that have both Rocks and Rain
 11. 'Tis a good Husband by which you shall succeed
 Or else from cares you scarcely will be freed
 Despair not of one, though you would be divorced
 Pth' Country, you will please well to live
 12. Good Housewifery shall make your Country-house
 So that there's many soon shall you behold
 A Country life in comfort you may lead
 If that your Husband's Friend you be not dead

What manner of Party shall you choose, I leave to you, simply yours and mine

1. HE that thou art design'd to wed,
 Shall have black hair, a cherry-red
 Shall in his blood the roses bear,
 And he shall have a golden hair.
2. Thou shalt have one so lovely
 A proper Youth, who may thee deare
 And will so often please thee well
 That soon he'll make thee weary well
3. A comely Blade, with a good name
 And dimpl'd cheeks, and with thee come
 When such a one does come to thee
 Lay coyness by, and hug him close
4. O leme, a man with yellow hair,
 Right for the stroke that he shall bear
 'Tis Venus colour, and is always true
 To love, and gives a Woman her true
5. She's coming, with a dimple in her chin,
 That is to hold you tack at inn and inn;
 Her ruby lips kind kisses will afford,
 And you may take her on my honest word.
6. Black eye-brows, with a sparkling diamond eye,
 Has she, for which with good and all you'll lye;
 A wanton air she carries in her look,
 And for to take you, lays out all her hooks.

7. Come

7. Come, Dutch Girl, the Maiden is thy due,
Approach then without fear, and boldly view;
What though he is low statured, Vandyke's touch
The largest graft does in the wall have put.
8. He's a dark brown, pale, tall, and very thin,
Who soon will purchase thy most sweet skin;
With whom you'll live a happy, jolly life,
And he'll be well content with such a Wife.
9. Now, Sir, your lot turns out, her dark brown hair,
And Fanny's mole, a blemish late appear;
Her hair inclining unto red you'll see,
Who is delig'd, by Fortune's care, for thee.
10. O! hang not back, my pretty, I do love thee,
See where he's coming that must be your true love;
Dark colour'd eye-brows, and a ruddy cheek,
Marked out for thee with a sure black stroke.
11. That Party who must wed thee, I'll not say,
His picture to you I'll now ever draw;
He's middle stature'd, has a highish brow,
Grey eyes, wide mouth'd, belonging to the crew.
12. O say, my Friend, the stars decree thee this,
Of Country bred, an Elder of the Town;
She's pretty, plump, white hair'd, round fac'd, black eye'd,
Her you will love, and she will love you true.

The least Finger has Mercury's Aspect.

Bothell, and threatens sudden Death: Δ Cross between it and the Table line, denotes the Perion of a noble spirit, very Liberal and Charitable.

2. Table-line: This Line being broad and of a lively Colour, promises a healthful Constitution, and contented Mind; and very Courageous: Crosses in it toward's the Little finger, denotes the Party to be much afflicted with Sickness: If the Line be double, or divided into three Parts, in any of the Extremities, it denotes good Fortune, and the Party of a generous Temper: This Line forked at the end, denotes Pride, Feign, and Jealousy: Riches are by Death, and as soon lost: If there be more than one found in it, they denote the Party proud and liberal: A double Line, and of a good Temper: If it branch towards the Fore-finger, and Middle finger, it denotes Honour.

[illegible]

4. Line of Women If this business is to cut or level down the Four Bigs, the Party's Ruin is threatened by keeping bad Company. In doing so it invites Women: Two Crooks upon the Line, one being on the Force finger and the other bending towards the Little finger. Between the Good work and the two crooked and god-dish Courts of Life, no Woman is going to stand Master, and therefore the wifer lot make it the Standard of what she wishes. The Line of Women will be the standard of the Party's Ruin.

3. Line in the Forehead—This line though sometimes broken, is a line of the faculty of a sound Judgment. If it be winding and crooked, it denotes avarice, it denotes Deceit and Flattery; If it makes a Triangle on Cheekbones, it denotes the Person as being a noble Deceit, a mixture of Deceit and Honour; If it begins thin, this Line, as well as the Middle Line, then denotes avarice, this betokens weakness of Judgment and Imbecility in a young and vigorous Woman; If it be a reason of hard Labour.

6. Plain of Adam—This is the Holiest of the Land, and thus it palmest of the Lines, therefore it is very significant. The Main being hollow, and the Lines embossed and discolored. Cause the Body to fall by his Execution. Then the Line beginning at the Middle of the Womb, goeth within the Plain, reaching towards the Braum of the Hand, they declare a hot and fiery Spirit, given to Broils and Quarrels, to great Hurt and Damage: If deep large Crookes be in the middle of the Plain, fit sign for the Party full life by Martial Deeds; if a Woman, that she shall have many Husband, and be active in bringing forth Children.

to Point of Death. This Line is false when any Crooked and broken Lines appear in it; they denote Sickness, and short Life. A clouded Moon appearing in it, denotes in a Woman Death in Child-bed; a bloody Spot signifies a violent Death; a Star, like a Comet, prefigures Ruin by War, or Death by Pestilence; but if a bright Sun appear therein, it denotes long Life. As for the Wrist-lines, they being fair, denote good Fortune; but if crooked and broken, the contrary.

The High Dutch and German Follies and bliss, and one false hearted, especially in matters of Love: An Eye of a mean bigness, clear and shining, denotes an honest plain Heart, free from Fraud or Dissimulation: A high Nose denotes Courage, and the Party much inclinable to Martial Exploits: If a Woman, it denotes her very pregnant, and much desirous of Copulations: A large full Nose, long and hanging down, denotes the Party covetous, desirous of Honour, yet wise in managing great Affairs: A Nose crooked and every, denotes the Party timorous, humane, proud, vain, glorious, treacherous, untruthful, fraudulent and unjust, and also a great Lye: A Nose round and of a middle size, denotes in Men Good nature and true Friendship, and in Women Prudence and Chastity: A Mouth standing unseemly wide, denotes the Party bold and courageous, a great Talker, and a Reporter of false Stories: A Mouth little and well proportioned, denotes the Party peaceable, courteous, eloquent, and desirous to learn all things: Thick Lips denote Foolishness, and use of an easy Belief, like what given to Devils: Thin Lips denote eloquence and acute Understanding: Lips well proportioned and well colour'd, denote the Party faithful, an Admirer of Vertue, and a Dealer of Vice.

A broad Ear, denotes Weakness of Memory, Slothfulness and little Success: Long Ears denote Boldness, Arrogance, Folly, Contention and Gluttony: Little Ears, and well proportion'd, denote the contrary, as Mildness, Temperance, &c. Sun-circled Ears, lying flat, denote the Party wise, constant, and a true Friend.

The Manner of Resolving doubtful Questions as to Good and Bad Fortune, by Astrology or Calculation of Nativities, &c.

IN this matter observe the time when the Question is demanded, consider the Planet that is Lord of the Ascendant, and the Sign that is posited, then taking the

The Diagram is a Scheme, in which, by comparing and making exact Parallels and Divisions of the Figure, you will have your Nativity brought within view, so you may understand how the Planet that ruled in it disposes, and from thence draw your Conclusions.

As for Example, Suppose my Nativity Party descends 45 Degrees in the Tenth House, which is called the House of Mourning, or the Third Angular House, the Affairs will, I suppose at that time, be prosperous.

If any Person make a Voyage when the Moon is in the Fifth House, it will be prosperous.

If you fall sick when the Moon is in the Eighth House, which is called the House of Death, it is very dangerous. If you contract Friendship when she is in the Third, it will prove a great Advantage.

If a Woman conceive when Venus is in the Fifth House, it will be a Male; Jupiter being Lord of her Nativity, promises Honour and Riches. Mars and Venus in the Fifth House, at the time of Conception, promises Love. And thus is the Rule for other matters.
